In performing their work, company employees subscribe to the values and objectives identified below:

Quality

Each employee is responsible for quality. Quality must and does drive all activities, project and administration. It must be considered to be given. Quality is viewed from two perspectives; the actual production of quality work and perception on the part of recipients of our work, whether internal or external, that a quality product has been delivered. Substance and perception are of equal value. Most importantly, the drive for quality is passionate and continuous.

Client Orientation

Clients' needs are anticipated and actions be targeted to satisfy their ultimate goals. Activities on behalf of our clients are also always within the envelope of our own values. One of the most, if not, the most important aspect of customer orientation is dependability such that products, schedules, appearances and clarity are never absent. We will always deliver on commitments.

Innovation

To be a leader in our respective professions, there must never ending quest for new ideas. This quest includes the development of home grown ideas as well as the applications of concepts developed elsewhere. New ideas include both technical process innovation as well as concepts designed to control costs with efficiency within our quality objectives as the ultimate goal.

Integrity

As we strive to produce quality work oriented to a client's mission in as efficient manner as possible, we recognize that we will face challenges. Human beings make mistakes on occasion. Progress only occurs if we are honest with ourselves and each other. Further, all our dealings whether internal or external and whether relating to a work product or administration, are conducted honestly and in a straight forward manner. Critical to the effectiveness and efficiency of leaders and managers is the understanding that their authority comes not from their position, but from colleagues' respect for their performance.

Passion

We embrace all the work we perform with passion. Without enthusiasm, the attention to detail which is the difference between mediocre work and quality work will be absent.
